

Dave,

The Job: Our back stamped concrete patio needed to be resealed.

The original sealer was wearing off and some of the stain color was disappearing. We knew we didn't want to deal with the company that originally installed the patio. While the patio had excellent colors and stamping, the sealing was just mopped on. I figured that was "how it's done". That process left bubbles and inconsistent thickness. It was just ugly!

Now was the opportunity to "get it right". After researching the process so I would be smarter about selecting the best contractor, I called several places. I also noticed Dave's trailer in the neighborhood. Dave came by and gave me his recommendations and the proposal. Turns out that he lived a few blocks away. I was impressed with how easily we could talk with Dave and his professionalism. He was very knowledgeable about his craft.

Dave and two helpers arrived at our house and all were very pleasant to talk with. They started cleaning the patio to get the dirt out of the crevices on our stamped concrete. Other contractors would have power washed the surface which would have blown some of the color away. Dave and his crew were on their knees with rags wiping the dirt out of the crevices. I couldn't believe the effort they went through. After they removed all the dirt they mopped the concrete several times with clean water to finish the cleaning preparation. After letting it dry completely, the brick on the house and patio posts were wrapped with plastic to prevent overspray from getting on them.

Unfortunately, I had to leave during the actual sealing process but returned to see the finished product. Because they scrapped out the old bubbled sealer from the original job, this made the sealer "Better than new!" I was totally blown away with how great it looked. Dave called me that evening to get my opinion of the job and I told him that although it was dusk, it looked great and I would really inspect it in the morning. Dave called me back that afternoon and I told him how fantastic the job was and glad to support a local contractor. After admiring the sealant job for a week, I'm still very pleased.

I would highly recommend Dave's Decorative Crete-Worx.

Thanks,
Charles E.
